6). Extracurricular activities play a vital role in shaping teenagers' decision-making skills and fostering personal growth. Beyond the school curriculums, these activities offer invaluable opportunities for adolescents to develop essential life skills. Engaging in sports, clubs, or community service instills discipline, teamwork and time management qualities that extend far beyond the specific activity.

Participating in extracurriculars expose teenagers to diverse perspectives, fostering open-mindedness and empathy. Moreover, extracurricular activities serve as a catalyst for self-discovery, helping teenagers identify their passions and strengths. This self-awareness is vital for making informed decisions about future academic and career paths, contributing to long-term personal growth.

In my opinion, having such experiences like participating in activities that are not related to school hours contribute significantly to teenagers' confidence and resilience, preparing them for the challenges of adulthood and enhancing their ability to make sound decisions.

To conclude, extracurricular activities play a multifaceted role in developing self-discovery and leadership skills, these helps the teenagers to navigate the complexities of life beyond academics.
